Llantrithyd is a small, historic rural village and hamlet located in the heart of the Vale of Glamorgan, Wales. Situated just south of the A48 road and roughly four miles south-east of the market town of Cowbridge, it rests in a tranquil, wooded valley setting. Despite its quiet, spread-out nature today, the village boasts a deeply rich history connected to prominent Welsh gentry and Tudor aristocracy. The rural community of Llantrithyd comprises an attractive combination of cottages, period houses and individually designed, modern properties. The majority of homes are positioned near the village Church, with other properties being scattered along several country lanes. The "Village" enjoys convenient access to the A48 trunk road at Bonvilston, which then, in turn, leads to Cardiff and Cowbridge. The Village of Bonvilston is close by includes public houses/restaurants and a village shop. Also nearby at Culverhouse Cross is the out-of-town shopping centre including Marks and Spencer, Tesco and other national retail outlets.
