Great Gaddesden is a picturesque rural village and civil parish in western Hertfordshire, set among rolling countryside in the Chiltern Hills. Known for its traditional English character, it features historic cottages, a village green, and the medieval St John the Baptist Church, parts of which date back to the 12th century.

The village lies a few miles northwest of Hemel Hempstead and offers a peaceful setting with walking trails, farmland, and woodland. Its history is closely linked to the nearby Ashridge Estate, making it an attractive destination for visitors interested in rural heritage, historic architecture, and the natural beauty of the Hertfordshire countryside.
