A LITTLE BIT OF HISTORY

Brook House was built in 1865 by Jonathan Wood who was educated in the building near Brook House (which once used to be the parish hearse) and he became a successful shoe maker having taken over his father's business around 1852. He needed larger premises, hence building Brook House. The workshop, with its outside steps, still exists today. Several apprentices were taken, one was a John Pharoah who was later in business at Ravenglass. His name is still to be seen scratched on a pane of glass in the workshop window. Another William Nicholson went to start a business in Ambleside.

Jonathan Wood died in 1911 and the business was continued by his two sons Henry and Joseph Wood on February 7th 1911, becoming known as H & J Wood - Boots, Shoe and Clog Makers.

The business carried on until 1941 thus being in existence for over 100 years. Joseph Wood died in 1939 and his brother Henry carried on for two years but eventually retired in 1941. The bits and pieces left in the workshop at the time were sold on the premises by Public Auction on Friday January 9th 1941. The sum of £50-17s-6d was obtained. The highest priced article being safe which realised £17-10s-0d.

The strong boots worn by farmers and hill shepherds are still known as Lamplugh Boots in some areas
