86 Ainsworth Street is an attractive, two bedroom Victorian terrace house, which has been significantly improved and transformed by a striking contemporary glass extension.

The property blends fine period features with modern design and cleverly connects the inside to established and well-designed outside spaces.

The accommodation comprises a well-proportioned reception room with sash windows, wooden floorboards, panelled staircase, bespoke recess book shelving and an effective inset woodburning stove. A sliding door opens to a refitted and well-equipped kitchen, which provides low-level units and drawers under a granite working surface with matching upstands, wall-mounted shelves and space for freestanding appliances. There is access to a courtyard area and a separate access leading to an extensively glassed dining area providing views of and access to the garden.

Upstairs, an impressive landing area leads to a bathroom suite with a separate shower cubicle and two double bedrooms both with ample built-in wardrobes and storage.

Outside, there is an established open front garden. The landscaped rear garden has been well designed in sections with a patio area perfect for entertaining, extensive planting and trees with raised beds leading to a graveled area in front of the studio. This private garden provides a well-constructed home office/studio with a decked seating area.
