About The Property

Looking for a substantial farmhouse with income potential, lifestyle appeal and the flexibility to suit multi-generational living or a business venture in West Wales? This 5-bedroom farmhouse, set in around 4 acres near Aberporth and the Cardigan Bay coast, includes overflow accommodation, six holiday cottages, a striking roundhouse and a chapel-like building known as Ty Nos, and a setting that already supports both holiday let income and a healing centre business.

Set down a track and surrounded by its own grounds of around 4 acres, this traditional 5-bedroom farmhouse offers a rare mix of home, business and lifestyle potential in a sought-after part of West Wales. Located close to Aberporth and just a 5 minute drive from its beautiful beaches, the property also enjoys easy access to the wider Cardigan Bay coastline, making it a very appealing prospect for those looking for an established income stream in a well-loved coastal area.

The main farmhouse provides the heart of the property and is complemented by a very useful arrangement of additional accommodation and commercial opportunity. Alongside the principal house is overflow accommodation, offering extra flexibility for extended family, guest use or operational needs, depending on requirements. Beyond that, there are six separate holiday cottages, each designed to provide comfort and style, creating a strong base for continued holiday letting income.

What makes this property particularly interesting is the way it balances private living with business use. The complex is currently operating not only with

The standout feature within the grounds is Ty Nos, a beautiful building used as a meditation room or chapel. It brings a very different character to the property and adds another layer to what is already a versatile and memorable setting. There is also a roundhouse, also ideal for meditation. It is easy to see why this space has become such an important part of the current business, offering a calm and separate environment for reflection, group work or private use.

Scattered around the property are various outbuildings which add both practicality and character. These spaces support the day-to-day running of the site while also reinforcing the rustic feel of the whole complex. For a buyer looking for somewhere with more than just a main house, these additional buildings make a real difference and add to the sense that this is a property with depth and flexibility rather than a single-purpose home.

The setting is another important part of the appeal. Although tucked away down a track, the property remains well placed for the coast, nearby villages and the popularity of Cardigan Bay as a holiday destination. Aberporth continues to be one of the better-known coastal spots in this part of West Wales, and being within such easy reach of the beaches only strengthens the commercial appeal of the cottages while also making the farmhouse an attractive place to live.

This is the kind of property that will likely suit a buyer with a clear sense of lifestyle as well as practicality. It could work well for those seeking a personal base with income already in place, for multi-generational living with separate areas for different branches of the family. The combination of a traditional farmhouse, overflow accommodation, six holiday cottages, Ty Nos, outbuildings and around 4 acres is not something that comes to the market all that often, especially this close to Aberporth and the Cardigan Bay coast.

Overall, this is a substantial and highly flexible coastal country property with
