About The Property

Looking for a traditional West Wales smallholding with useful farm buildings, grazing land and scope for modernisation? This 16.21-acre property near Glandwr combines a character farmhouse, a range of agricultural buildings including a former milking parlour, and rolling pasture land with far-reaching rural views across the Pembrokeshire countryside.

Set in a rural position within easy reach of Cardigan Bay and the North Pembrokeshire coast, this former working farm offers a fantastic opportunity for anyone looking for an equestrian setup, livestock holding, lifestyle move or a property with genuine agricultural potential. The setting feels wonderfully tucked away, with open countryside in every direction, while still being accessible to nearby villages and market towns.

The farmhouse itself has a traditional feel throughout and offers generous accommodation with plenty of character features still in place. From the gravelled yard, the property opens into a hallway leading through to the main living areas. The living room is a good-sized space centred around a wood burner set on a hearth, giving the room a cosy focal point. A separate dining room connects through to the conservatory/sunroom at the rear, where wide glazing frames the surrounding greenery and countryside views beautifully.

The kitchen has a more traditional farmhouse style with fitted units, stone detailing and a solid fuel Rayburn, adding plenty of character. A useful utility room sits just off the kitchen, providing extra storage and practical day-to-day space, along with access out towards the yard and buildings. Also on the ground floor is a bathroom with shower, basin and WC.

Upstairs, the landing leads to three bedrooms, all enjoying pleasant outlooks over the surrounding land and countryside. Exposed beams and cottage-style proportions add to the character upstairs, while an additional storage room provides useful flexibility for storage, hobby use or potential office space.

While the farmhouse would benefit from updating and modernisation in areas, it already offers a solid base with plenty of charm and the sort of layout that could easily be adapted over time to suit a buyer's own style and needs.

Outside is where this property really starts to stand out. The extensive gravelled yard provides ample parking and turning space for multiple vehicles, trailers or agricultural machinery. Alongside the house sits a substantial range of traditional and agricultural outbuildings, including former cattle housing, a milking parlour and sizeable covered storage barns. These buildings provide a huge amount of flexibility for farming use, livestock, workshops, machinery storage or hobby farming ventures.

The land extends to approximately 16.21 acres in total and is mainly arranged as grazing pasture, split into manageable enclosures bordered by mature hedging and trees. The views from the land are particularly impressive, stretching out across rolling West Wales countryside. The acreage and setup would suit buyers looking for a smallholding lifestyle, equestrian interests or anyone wanting space for animals and rural living.

The surrounding area is well known for its scenic countryside and easy access to both Pembrokeshire and Ceredigion coastlines. Nearby Glandwr offers a rural village setting, while larger centres including Crymych, Cardigan and Newcastle Emlyn provide shops, schools, cafes and everyday amenities. The coastline of Cardigan Bay and the beaches of West Wales are also within comfortable driving distance, making this a location that balances country living with access to the coast.

Properties with this combination of acreage, usable buildings and traditional farmhouse accommodation rarely come available in this part of West Wales, particularly with so much scope for future improvement and lifestyle potential.
