About The Property

Looking for a historic West Wales country house with substantial accommodation, fascinating heritage and exceptional flexibility? Tyllwyd Mansion dates from the 18th century and stands within approximately 5.23 acres (inc driveway), offering eight principal bedrooms, a self-contained annex, ballroom, library, commercial kitchen and former servants' quarters, with a further approximately 14.44 acres available by separate negotiation.

Dating back to the 1730s, with substantial additions during the early 19th century, Tyllwyd Mansion is a remarkable country house whose history stretches across almost three centuries. Once at the centre of one of the significant estates of the old Cardiganshire area, its story includes connections with the Rebecca Riots, Mary Seacole and Florence Nightingale during the Crimean War, the East India Company and the early British Homeopathic Society. The estate and its former owners have also been documented in several historical works, leaving an unusually rich record of the house and those associated with it.

Today, Tyllwyd combines that heritage with extensive and remarkably versatile accommodation, equally suited to family life, multi-generational living or potential hospitality use (as used by the current owners).

The traditional entrance hall immediately gives a sense of the age and proportions of the house, leading into a collection of individual reception rooms.

At its heart is the impressive ballroom, measuring approximately 8.35m x 5.95m, with high ceilings, sash windows, original dance floor, wood-burning stove and French doors opening onto the garden. It is a wonderful entertaining space, but one whose proportions would allow it to adapt easily to everyday family life.

The south-facing library has sash windows, extensive fitted shelving and a wood-burning stove, creating a characterful second reception room which could also work particularly well as a home office or music room.

Details Continued:
The generous dining room comfortably accommodates a long table for family gatherings and entertaining, centred around an inglenook fireplace with JOTUL wood-burning stove. French doors lead onto the west-facing patio.

The kitchen extends to approximately 9.03m and is fitted with freestanding cabinetry, stainless-steel work surfaces, a Rangemaster cooker and Villeroy & Boch sink, with French doors opening onto the eastern terrace. Alongside is a traditional pantry retaining its slate slab shelving and original flooring and a door with slate steps leading down to a cellar. A utility room, WC and separate ground-floor shower room (off the ballroom) complete this part of the accommodation.

Planning permission has also been granted for a substantial orangery on the west patio (off the rear hall from the ballroom and the dining room), providing the opportunity to create another impressive living or entertaining space.

First Floor:
Upstairs, the scale of the house continues.

The principal suite is an exceptional room measuring approximately 8.25m x 5.80m. There is ample space for both sleeping and sitting areas, while two sash windows are complemented by the striking circular gable window that forms such a recognisable feature of the exterior. The suite has steps down to its own shower room with rainfall shower.

The remaining bedrooms are arranged across the first floor and retain an appealing mixture of sash and arched windows, timber floors, original fireplaces and decorative details.

Two south-facing doubles feature fireplaces and individual painted wall treatments, while another substantial bedroom has fitted wardrobes, a vanity area and en suite bathroom with claw-foot bath. Further bedrooms and bathroom facilities provide plenty of flexibility for family and guests.

A smaller room, previously used as an office, connects with an additional double bedroom overlooking the gardens, creating the possibility of another private suite, dressing room, nursery or work-from-home arrangement.

Second Floor - Former Servants' Quarters:
The second floor contains the former servants' quarters, formerly made up of seven rooms it is now an open space with woodwork remaining of the old partitions, with original floorboards and pretty dormer windows to one side. Currently used for storage, this is a fascinating surviving part of the house and provides considerable scope for additional accommodation or alternative uses, subject to the necessary permissions.

Self-Contained Annex and Commercial Kitchen:

The rear wing of the house provides independent accommodation, accessed from a corridor off the kitchen and comprising a sitting room with wood-burning stove set within an inglenook fireplace, fitted kitchen, double bedroom with built-in wardrobes and private en suite.

With separate external access to the rear, while remaining connected to the main house, this is a particularly useful addition for extended family, guests or potential hospitality purposes.

Also adjoining the house is a former barn incorporating a very useful commercial kitchen and store, fitted with industrial sinks, ovens and work space, adding another dimension to the property's potential for entertaining, retreats, events or guest accommodation, subject to any necessary consents.

Gardens & Grounds:

Tyllwyd Mansion is offered with approximately 5.23 acres of grounds and driveway, providing a mature and established setting around the house.

Gardens surround the property with mature trees, lawns and established planting, while a paved courtyard adjoining the house provides a sheltered area for outdoor dining and seating. There is also a polytunnel and vegetable-growing area, together with ample parking within the grounds.

PLEASE NOTE: For those seeking a more substantial holding, a further approximately 14.44 acres of pasture and woodland are available by separate negotiation. This additional land incorporates a pond and areas of woodland and pasture, with the striking Wellingtonian Sequoia forming a memorable landmark in the field in front of the house.

Alongside its historic character, Tyllwyd has benefited from renewable-energy installations. A roof-mounted solar thermal array contributes towards hot water, while a 4kW ground-mounted solar PV system generates electricity and benefits from an index-linked Feed-in Tariff stated to run until 2037.

Tyllwyd is a house where the history is still clearly visible, yet its scale and flexibility give it considerable relevance for modern life. The ballroom and library, self-contained annexe, commercial facilities, extensive bedroom accommodation, former servants' quarters and grounds create possibilities ranging from a substantial family home to multi-generational living or hospitality use.

Viewing is strongly recommended to appreciate the scale, character, setting and possibilities offered by this remarkable West Wales country house.

INFORMATION ABOUT THE AREA:

Tyllwyd sits in the countryside near Tanygroes in Ceredigion, within reach of both rural West Wales and the Cardigan Bay coastline. The A487 provides road connections towards Cardigan and Aberystwyth, while the beaches and coastal villages of Aberporth, Tresaith, Penbryn and Llangrannog are all accessible from the property.

Cardigan provides a wider range of shops, supermarkets, schools, cafés and everyday services, making this a rural setting that remains well placed for the coast and surrounding towns.
