Germoe's history dates back to the Bronze Age. Tregonning Hill holds the remains of a Celtic stronghold – Castle Pencaire – which dates from c. 250 BC and offers visitors some of the finest views of West Cornwall. Germoe sits within a UNESCO-recognised site designated as a 'place of significance to the whole of humanity'. This puts the Cornish Mining World Heritage Site on a par with international treasures such as the Taj Mahal, the Pyramids, Stonehenge, and the Great Wall of China. The parish itself is widely dispersed with a mix of residential properties and farms. Germoe Churchtown is the centre of the parish, with its 12th Century church and church hall providing the community hub. The village school is a short walk from the centre, and offers a rich indoor and outdoor learning environment for local children. Nearby local facilities, including bars, cafes and restaurants, can be found in neighbouring Praa Sands. Here you will find one of Cornwall's hidden gem beaches, which offers water sports and family leisure facilities. Further afield, local towns include Penzance and Helston, where a wider array of shopping and leisure facilities can be found.
