Hadlow Down is a small village located between Buxted and Heathfield in the Wealden District of East Sussex. Being located on a hill, Hadlow Down benefits from beautiful views all year round, no matter the season.

This is one of the many reasons the village forms part of the High Weald Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

Historically Hadlow Down was a rural farming community until the 16th century where the Wealden cannon making industry began at Hoggets Farm in the north of the village.

Fast forward to 2024 and the village still benefits from a strong community spirit which centres around the New Inn pub, St Mark's School & St Mark's Church.

The 62-acre area of woodland known as Wilderness Wood is located close to the centre of the village which is home to a variety of fauna & flora and is a favourite for families and schools to visit and regularly hold events throughout the year.
